Delivering Extraordinary Life Events

The Rose - National Flower of Morocco

The Kelaa Mgouna region in southern Morocco, near Damascus is known for their roses. This mythical 'Valley of Roses' is said to harvest 3,500 to 5,000 tons of roses each year.

From April to June the delicate cultivation of the roses is carried out by women who have a gentle touch around the thorns.

About 40% of the harvest each year is transferred to distilleries to become essential oils. The essential oils are then marketed to perfumers. The residues from the production are processed into rose water to be used in the cosmetics industry in the way of creams, soaps and lotions.

It is said that there are many benefits from the Moroccan rose – it infuses the skin with the warm, flowery scent; has regenerating power; is comforting on an emotional level; and soothing on an energetic level.
